To that end, ArtsHacker is covered with a free Photoshop template that can help you design the best possible image title that looks great in browser and app-based versions. Just Specs If you're more of a DIY type and you only need the specifications, here's go: Header: 1,500 pixels wide x 500 pixels Profile: 400 pixels x 400 pixels Why the Since Template Helps on Twitter relies on the awesome, responsive design, you should know that you don't get 100% of these pixels showing up in all browsers and device types. To get to a design that does not suffer from #AutoCropFail, you will need to rub with calculations available in the dev resources, along with a lot of experience and error. Or you can simply use the following template. Download template tips, use the template layers. Each section is a unique layer and the text is grouped into a group. Create a new layer to start your design and position it under them. You can then enable/disable or edit their opacity to see if your design falls into naughty or nice territory. Save your file to the highest possible file quality (max filesize = 2MB). All social media platforms compress and optimize the images you upload, so if you do all this ahead of time, you'll find yourself with poor image quality. Save your file in JPG or PNG format. Less is more. Avoid loading the title image with small details or text. Free online design resources Without Photoshop skills? No photoshop app? - No, no, no, no, no, all the way up there? Don't worry, the internet is covering you. Both Cava.com and the Snappa.com basic customization of a wide range of templates. You'll need to create a free account to access the design tools and download the end result to prepare for the impact of email marketing. Carva Twitter Header Header Templates Snappa Twitter Header Templates In addition to my consulting business, I'm also a director of Venture Industries Online but don't let this headline fool you that I'm just a tech geek. I bring 20+ years of globally widely based art, consulting experience to the table to help customers break away from the cycle of single-size solutions and instead provide them with opportunities that allow them to progress along the technical curve rather than trying to catch up by becoming slower. With the vision of the legacy support strategy and the education of creative ideas, my mission is to deliver advanced next-generation technology designed specifically for the field of performing arts. The first step in this journey began in 2010, when the Venture platform was launched, designed by a year-round managed website designed specifically for art organizations and artists. For fun, I write a daily blog about the orchestral business, provide an internal arts platform to speak their minds, lead a team of fearless arts professionals to hack into the arts, run an arts business incubator and love a good coffee drink.
